Who Am I? is an introspective sculpture that encourages individuals to confront their identities.

It take true courage and wisdom to accept yourself for who you are. In the world of mass media, the individual has emerged at the forefront but the real question is if the "self" and "I" in the end are a medium or an interface? The singular individual has evolved from being a philosophical question to a series of judgments attached to social actions and behavioral meaning. When we examine ourselves without reality as a prefix, what becomes necessary, and what are the limitations that we cannot overcome?

This artwork explored the meaning of the word "I" by using dolls created with different textures of material using their shapes and movements to reinforce questions about identity. Who am I? Where did I come from? Where am I going? What is the meaning of my life? What is my social role and positioning?
